

How can I develop new skills that save time & money?

Experience exchange and innovation: a set of new tools for Protected Area management and a wealth of opportunities to meet like-minded people.

Working in Protected Areas is challenging. Routinely, professionals need to find solutions that consolidate existing skills by developing new ones in areas often beyond their field of expertise - whether that involves developing more technical aspects of park management, such as planning or biodiversity conservation, or learning about community-focused activities such as tourism, education, stakeholder engagement or partnership building, a wide range of skills require to be applied and continuously built upon.

As the largest network of Protected Area professionals, EUROPARC gives you access to a wide range of online resources and to a living library of experience. Our networking events, both digital and face-to-face, are an opportunity to connect with Protected Area professionals from across Europe to share experience, tools and best practice.
